Whether the attitude adopted by Sir Lionel was excusable goes Into different ground. The Deputy Under-Secretary was not to be expected to offer views compromising himself, beyond the normal leeway of a highly-placed civil servant to prove he is practical. recommended to get into touch with Unofficial Members of the Legislative Council, to explore the subject anew, and make a bid for support. This would be a waste of time if Club members should regard themselves as the only group competent to make an objective study of local needs. With them, it is possibly true, idealism is somewhat in the nature of a fetish, but there is no reason to ascribe the Club's atiltude to the pleasure of paddling someone cise's canoe. On the contrary, those who drew up the memorandum, as many others, are convinced they serve the community's best interests, even if there is a psychological background, insistence on early constitutional reform. That aspect, however, does not preclude association with those Unofficials now representing the community in the Councils. It should encourage it. As a preliminary, the Reform Club might do well to revise their programme, and concentrate on social welfare. While local investors cannot be induced to subscribe to commercial enterprises, any organisation overseus invited is likely to perceive lack of confidence and wonder why they are expected to throw money down the drain. Further research into social welfare deficiencies, might at least, get pleasing results. It cannot be sufficiently stressed that the solid foundation of the Reform Club case is that the refugee influx has been on a scale elevating the problem to an international level. Hongkong is heavily burdened, educational and medical facilities are grossly over-strained, inadequate, but the remedy should not be the sole responsibility of the Hongkong taxpayer. The claim to unfavourable. However, the Deputy international assistance—and call it Under-Secretary did make one practical auggestion. Reform Club leaders were charitable—is strong.

Bach Bicentenary

There will be a special programme over Radio Hongkong this coming Friday night to commemorate the Bicentenary of the death of Johann Sebastian Bach.

The programme will take the form of a feature written by Jack Shepherd and produced by Betty Drown and Ernest Liddell with the music arranged by Betty Drown. Jack Shepherd will be remembered for his Chopin programme produced over Radio Hongkong last year.

The feature is based on "The Little Chronicle" of Anna Magdalena Bach. It will be on the air from 9.11 p.m. on Friday. The dialogue parts will be taken by Katherine de Chaffoy, Austin Coates, Ernest Liddell, Len Starbuck and Arthur Bardens.

Bach's series on "The Art of the Fugue" will be featured in the "Goodnight Music" at 11.20 p.m. nightly from Monday to the following Tuesday: Tonight, from 9.15 p.m., Radio Hongkong will

After Twenty Years of Research on Shakespeare's Theatre A College President Brings It to Life in Perfect Replica

IN a little room in Hofstra College, New York, spectral figures in miniature of King Lear, Falstaff, Lady Macbeth, Hamlet and others are treading the boards again. As soon as the window curiains are drawn, according to some of the more imaginative atudents, the better-known characters of William Shakespeare's works come out of the past and re-live their dramatic and comic roles.

Whether or not they do we leave to those who believe in whimsy, leprechauns, and fairy tales. However, the Bard of Avon's favourite subjects certainly have a perfect setting for such ghostly goings-on. For, after 20 years of research and labour, Dr John C. Adams, the president, has completed an amazing replica of Shakespeare's Globe Play-gravings, there were no pictures, paintings or drawings left of the theatre after it burned down in 1613; Before Dr Adams began his project, he searched through thousands of Elizabethan documents, maps, contracts and plays.

Built on a detailed scale of one to 24, the model represents an 84-foot wide, octagonal building with eight gallery sections on three levels.

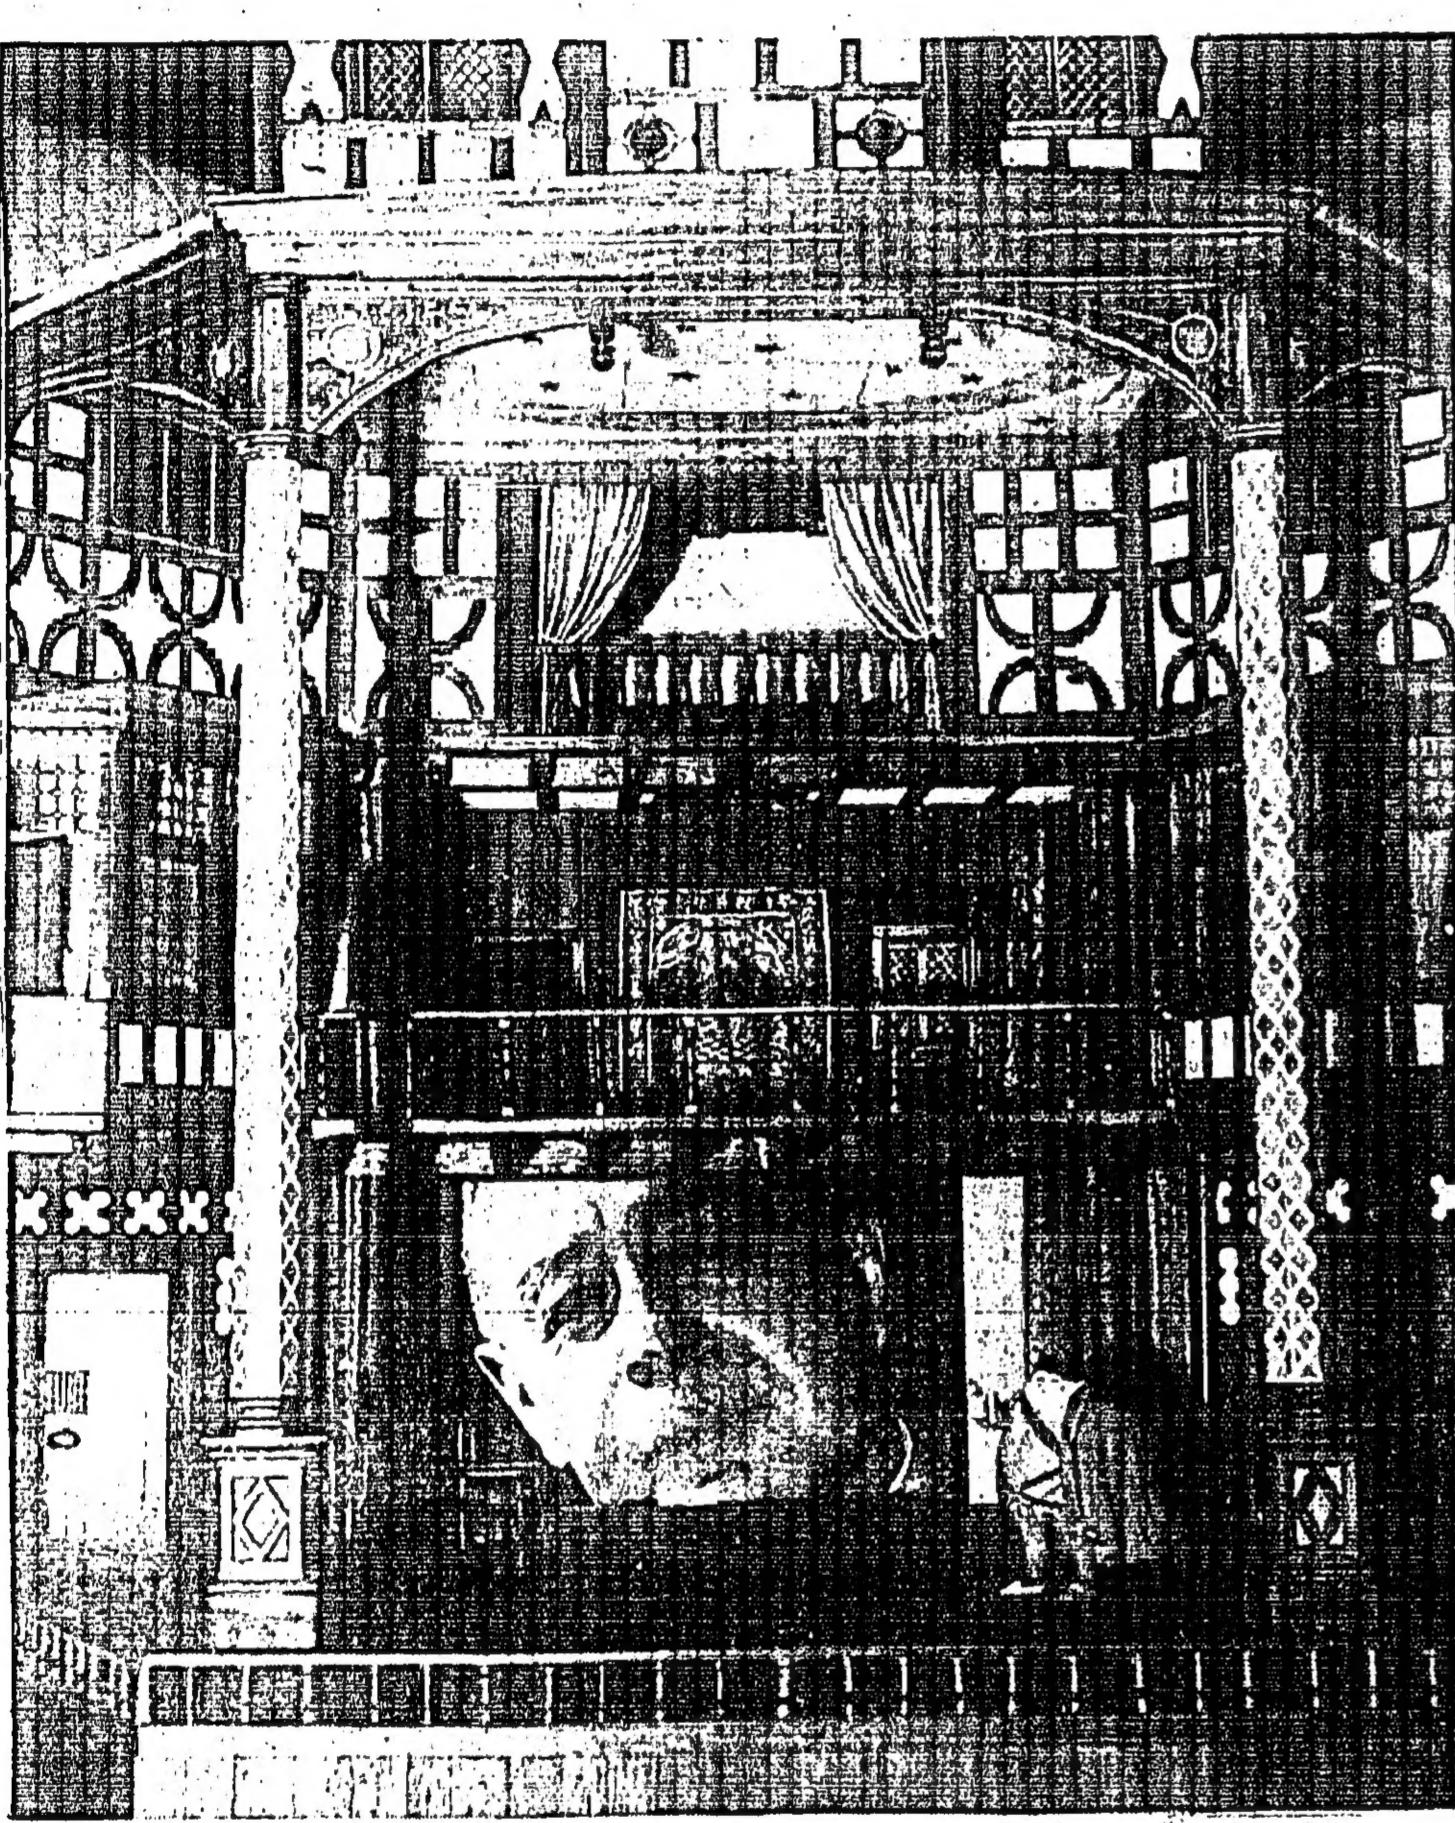

Four years ago, Dr Adams enlisted the aid of Irwin Smith, a noted artist, who has reproduced all the curtains, signs and stage furniture.

HANGING over the door is this sign showing Atlas holding a globe on his shoulders.

PEEKING THROUGH the open back of the model theatre, outdoor scenes were dramatised. The ceiling was known as Smith gazes across the outer stage, used in Playhouse when "the Heavens" and had the signs of the zodiac painted on it.

NO MORE FOR THE CHILDREN

Because of the continuing need for economy in the overall field of film production, the J. Arthur Rank Organisation has decided with regret that it necessary to suspend production of special films for children. Children's Enterlainment Films, the section of the Rank Organisation which has pioneered this work has, during the past five years, made 21 long story films, 6 short story films, 27 serial episodes and specially shorts,

These films and the Saturday morning club shows at which they are screened have been highly praised by parents and by educational authorities, and are the subject of frequent commendations in the recently issued report of the Committee on Children and the Cinema se up by the Home Office.

A considerable backlog o

new films has now been bull up. This backlog includes long story films, one serial of 8 episodes and 32 shorts. These will be issued over an extended period of many months.

PRE-TRANSFORMA-TION . . . Bridal outfit by Arthur Banks in Cloud Blue matelasse or fine English brocade. The dress is shown above before transformation.

The peacock line, fullness falling from huge side bows, gives emphasis to the sheath-like skirt. A demure cap, in the same fabric covers the bride's hair, and veil is waistlength.

Velvet Touch

HAT about a pale blue blushing bride? Or perhaps a wedding gown in mushroom pink would strike the right note, Or do you feel that tradition should not be flouted thus outrageously?

Does your ideal bride blush prettily beneath her headdress or orange-blossom, and the long, floating embroldered veil that belonged to grandmother? Does she carry the inevitable bouquet of lilies, and wear a white satin dress?

This is the time of year for brides. Hundreds of them are making that graceful pilgrimage up the central nisle, and scarcely any show a spark of originality. I suppose it is rather revolutionary to expect them to blossom forth in coloured gowns. Apart from their personal misgivings, they will probably have to contend with parental opposition, but I have a suspicion that very shortly someone will follow the lead given by couturier Arthur Banks, who recently showed one of the levellest bridal outfits of the season. It was in soft Cloud Blue matelasse-or fine English brocade (illustrated on this page). The fabric is rather like grosgrain with a scrolled design of ribbon and roses woven into it. It is heavy, and hangs well.
Illustrated is the dress before and after "transformation."

Muffs Replace Flowers

Arthur Banks showed another wedding dress, this time in the more usual ivory shade of brocade, with a low bertha collar. The decollelage was filled in with fine net. Yet another of his brides were a tiny white cap of feathers, with a short veil, and carried a ruffled muff. I recently saw a range of bridal materials mostly fine brocades, in soft pastel colours. Silver mushroom, ice green, pale gold, mauve cerise, cream rose and honey beige are a few of the new shades suggested for the bride, There is a Victorian look about the patterns of scrolled ribbons and lilies, birds and flowers, embroidered on the fabric. After all, why not a pastel bride and ivory bridesmalds, as a change? Some of the most economical and charming wedding dresses we have seen around town lately were made with enormous skirts, and neat brocade tops. Short veils are popular among the younger brides, and many now carry white prayer books, or thry organdie muffs, instead of flowers.

Headdresses are becoming plainer. Frederick Starke closed his recent collection by showing a bride whose tiny headdress was rather like a flattened beret. He produced a grosgrain to contrast sharply with the wedding gown, when it turned into a dinner dress.

The latest style for fashion-conscious bridesmaids is the ballet-length dress in net, organdle or broderic anglaise, with matching embroidered caps, and short white gloves. The prettiest gloves of this type seen lately had jersey mesh palms, and figured organza backs. Surprisingly few people realise that organzle is a practical cotton, and that organza is its

And after the wedding, what does the happy bride choose for an evening dress? She might justifiably succumb to sheer nylon fabrics with such intriguing names as "Mille et Deuxleme Nuits" and "Mille et Troisieme Nuits." One thousand and two nights describes a nylon woven with a fine tinsel thread in fine stripes. One thousand and three nights is a nylon plaid in unusual shot colouring, green from one side, rose-pink from the other, with the tartan check picked out in glearning tinsel.

Another interesting nylon fabric is that woven for "Gorgeous Gussie." It is a nylon and rayon mixture, with a self pattern like fine lace. Heavier materials with tinsel woven right in have a glistening appearance, which is very nttractive.

Colour Of The Moment

Most young brides like to possess at least one ball-dress in the "grand manner." For them, the classic Duchesse Dogana sating could not be bettered. Favourite colour at the moment is caramel, with bottle green as a runner-up.

A black ribbed satin, lined with royal blue, might have been lifted from grandmother's day, and the blue lining gives a slightly shot, dense effect to the material,

For those who like the rustle of taffein, would recommend those weven with chenille. Sometimes the chenille is weven through in wide stripes, and then cut at intervals and tied so that the fabric appears to be covered with tiny velvet bows. Other taffetas had narrow strips of chenille threaded closely together, and the most popular colours are still dark and glowing. Olive and steel shades, woven with sharp yellow chenille, have an unusual effect. And if expense is no object, then the most beautiful fabrics to choose are the pure allks with a crushed silver-paper look. Blue and green, bottle and black, grey and black, gold and white, are some of the colour combinations, all woven to have a shimmering

Rules For A Successful Home Dye

EXOME dyeing of wardrobe and household articles is one of the most satisfying household tasks possible.

The principal rules are easy to follow: Be sure the fabric is clean. Thoroughly wet articles with water before putting them in the dye bath. Be sure container is large enough so that fabric can be moved about freely. Large items such as curtains, table-cloths, draperies, evening gowns should be handled in a laundry tub or washing machine. Follow package directions implicitly. Colour Remover

To make the job easier, use colour remover before redyeing an article. Colour remover is also good for removing colour from streaked, faded, spotted or stained fabric before dycing, so that the new colour will be Scott O'Keefe, of Massachusetta, which time the blood pressure even and true. To get lighter colours than those shown in the colour card, use less dye in the solution. To deepen the shade, use more dye. Be careful not to force fabric between stirrer and container. Remove the article from the dye bath before adding more dye.

> Something Simple If you are a beginner, dye something simple, and be sure of the fibre content of the fabtic. Regular dyes will handle silk, cotton, wool and linen. Allpurpose dyes work well on synthetics such as nylon and varlous rayons, Exceptions seem to be such fabrics as acetate-rayon taffetn and sharkskins. As for the shrinkage problem, well, a certain amount of shrinkage should be anticipated, so be sure that the article you plan to dye is large enough to cope with this.

Darker Shades For the best results in covering one colour with another, except black, dye with darker shades of the same colour as the original, or darker shades of related colours. For example, navy, red or royal blue. A

When Patty breaks through opponent's service he always resists that beckoning temptation to "sit back and admire your handiwork." This is point where he turns on pressure. It was Bob Falkenburg who atressed that advice.

"When you break through service press three times as hard," said Falkenburg. Patty always tries to remember that.

3. "The game got me carly, and I could play it for nothing." In that single sentence, Budge Patty argues, is a most important clue to Britain's tennis setbacks,

In practically every town and city in America there are scores parks with hundreds of courts FREE for anybody who wants to play.

"You may pay 25 cents an for a floodlit court—but all, and any kid can up an old racket for to nothing—and if he get free, second-hand balls, well, he's not considered very bright"

Amidst all the tears that have been shed for England, the team which found it was not good enough for the World Cup, and for Scotland, the team which, even more ignominiously, declared in advance it was not good enough, one outstanding question has still to be answered—Where do we go from here?

There is no one now who will deny that we have lost our place as masters of the football world, One of the main reasons for our crash is the present-day preponderance in Britain of part-time footballers.

Most of our players devote too much time to outside in-

Delay Play of Trump If Hand Is Tough.

By OSWALD JACOBY

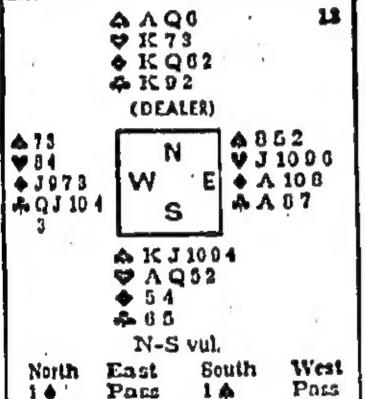

66T MADE the percentage play Memphia bridge player, "but it didn't work very well. Please tell me if there was anything wrong with my calculations. "West opened the queen of clubs, and barng went two tricks in that suit. I trumped the third club and drew three rounds of trumps. Then I led a diamond from my hand. "I reasoned that If West had the ace of diamonds, I would be able to win two diamond tricks in dummy. On one of those I would eventually diseard a low heart, after which everything would be in apple-ple order. "Much to my disappointment, however, East had the ace of diamonds. What's more, the hearts didn't break, so I had i to give up a trick in that suit]

"What went wrong, and how should I have played the hand?" My Memphis correspondent is evidently an experienced bridge player, and his reasoning was excellent in the main. that he could have his apple ple and cat it too!

He finds out at once |that the nce is badly located Therefore he must for him. make some other plan to avoid the loss of a heart trick. That's just where he gains by having trumps still in the dummy.

After declarer regains the lead, he can draw two - but two-rounds of trumps. Then he cashes the three top hearts. If the hearts brenk 3-3, there is no risk in taking the top hearts; the opponents will follow suit each time. If the hearts break 4-2, the best chance to avoid the loss of a trick in the suit is to hope that the player with four hearts also has the last trump. This was actually the case West would not be able to the third top heart because two rounds of trumps would leave him trumpless, South would get by safely with the top hearts and could then ruff his last heart with dummy's remaining trump.

(3) Each team scored a different total of points. The totals must have been 5-4-3-0 or 5-4-2-1. (4) But 5-4-3-0 lan't possible, for the Voles came third. Since their goals were 15-15, they cannot have won one match and lost one, for the differences of the scores in these matches would have been the same. So the point-totals were 5-4-2-1. (5) The Stoute drew 5-5 with the Wessels and won two matches totalling eight goals more for than "against." So they won 6-4
